The Foxborough Historical Society Presents:

Foxborough WWI: Up close up and personal

Prior to America's late entry into World War I, Foxborough had one nurse already caring for soldiers in France, several young men had gone to Canada to enlist and the Foxboro Co. was working around the clock making air speed indicators for British aircraft.

Nearly 2,000 people celebrated in the center of town when America went to war. They were determined to support the troops in every way they could – and they did. They blazed their way into an incredible chapter of Foxborough history, and Town Historian Jack Authelet will take us behind the headlines to share their stories up close and personal at the May 27 meeting of the Foxborough Historical Society.

Every draft quota was filled, every Victory Bond drive over the top. Hand-knit items by the hundreds to keep the soldiers warm, sacrificing food so it could be sent to the men fighting the war, and collecting clothing for the refugees in Belgium and France were all part of helping the war effort. Hear about the war from the men themselves through letters from the trenches, the thrill one had when his unit fired the first American shells at the enemy, and the anxiety of two local families, each with three sons already in the war, when the fourth started to pack his bags to go to war as well.

Every church, every organization, each group of school children did something for the war effort while preparing our own community to protect itself in the event of an enemy attack.

Lawrence Foster was our first casualty in WWI. For years, his mother yearned for answers as to how he died. Would she ever get what she longed for?

When the Armistice was signed and opposing forces laid down their arms, it was a local couple who were the first to walk through No Man's Land under the neutral banner of the Salvation Army. They spoke to troops on each side of the line in the international language of coffee and donuts! Three Foxborough men had been lost in combat and a nurse, whose unit had been nationalized for service, became Foxborough's only woman to die in service to her country, a victim of the epidemic that had gripped the nation.

The story of these families and the sacrifice they made will be featured by Town Historian Jack Authelet in his presentation.
